To the present volume of the HERD BOOK, very little in the way of prologue will suffice ; for, although deprived of the ability with which its originator, the late respected Mr. George Coates, commenced and continued it, the same plan of arranging the work has been strictly adhered to by his successor. A short time since, indeed, the present proprietor purposed making a somewhat considerable alteration in the construction of the succeeding volumes, and one which he had conceived might be accompanied with a proportionate improvement. The object contemplated was to give the Bulls in one volume, and the Cows, with their produce, in another—a distinction which, it is submitted, might, in facilitating reference, avoiding confusion, and on many other similar points, have worked well. This course, however, has, after due consideration, been abandoned, as not being calculated to realize the advantages anticipated. The Editor consequently owns in this another test to the judgment of his predecessor; while in support of, as in deference to it, he repeats that the highest recommendation to the work is, its being got up strictly in accordance with the plan of the author. Further than this, it is only necessary to add that this volume comes up to the close of the year 1845, as the pedigrees of such Cows and Heifers only are given separately in it which had produce before the 1st of January, 1846.

 To save space, and too constant repetition, a slight alteration has been made in printing the pedigrees of the Cows. After the great grandam, it will be observed, a blank or hyphen, thus —, has been substituted for the literal abbreviations, “gr. gr.” Should this, as it is hoped, be found to read altogether easy and intelligible, the Editor purposes to adopt it more generally in future, as the space so spared enables him to give all the pedigrees in full, instead of finishing many of them with the “&c.” that has hitherto been occasionally employed.

PREFACE.

IN publishing a new volume of the Herd Book, with the name of a new Editor attached to it, the subject for consideration becomes one bearing rather on the future than the past—one redolent, perhaps, more of promise than performance. Any question as to the necessity for a work of this character, or the manner in which it has hitherto been prepared, forms no text for the present proprietor to usher in his own claims with: both have been long and amply answered. The use of the Book, and the ability of the gentlemen who so long conducted it, can be best estimated by the reception the Work has met with from the public—a support far too decided to require one word on behalf of its actual continuation. The Editor is fully sensible that the grand point now rests with himself—the question how far he may be qualified to succeed those who have succeeded so well, and how able he may be to progress in a pursuit of which the most arduous part has been accomplished. Here, again, he knows that, to a great extent, he must turn to the same proof as his predecessors, and that his labours must be looked on as his best arguments. At the same time, however, he may perhaps be permitted to offer a word or two as to the reasons which led him to enter on duties for which so much experience—if not, indeed, natural predilection—is required. For above twenty years, then, has the study of his profession constantly associated him with the most eminent breeders and farmers of the kingdom; while his long intimacy with the Messrs. Coates has, he flatters himself, been attended with some of that advantage their well-practised observation might be supposed to impart. Thus, with the thorough countenance of those who commenced, and the kind encouragement of a large number of eminent breeders whose support went so far to establish, the Herd Book (amongst the first of whom may be ranked the late esteemed Earl Spencer), its new Editor intends to carry on the Work according to the material he may collect and the occasion there may be for using it. That this may be effected with something of that feeling of mutual satisfaction which hitherto has passed between its patrons and proprietors is his greatest hope, and one which shall lack no attention or exertion on his part to realize.

The main features in the construction of the Herd Book, it has already been stated, will be adhered to throughout, at the same time that any improvement likely to further the interests of breeders, or assist the reader in his researches, will, of course, be adopted. Amongst the first and most important of these, it has been suggested that the appearance of the volumes in continuation at much shorter intervals than has yet been customary, would considerably increase the value and utility of the work, as one of every-day-reference. With this the Editor will do all in his power to comply, though, in attempting it, he will be compelled to ask even greater assistance from those kind and constant friends whose labours in its behalf have tended materially to make the Herd Book the correct chronicle of a breed of animals it has become no less a national pride than a profit to produce. "The authority," in fact, of a work which gathers its contents from such a variety of sources and districts, depends very greatly on those who consult it; to such he should feel indebted for the correction of error and the conveyance of information. Indeed, to the majority of those who have achieved that success which he merely records, the compiler has the happiness to add he does stand indebted; and while, as in duty-bound, he returns his best thanks for the past, it is accompanied with the hope that he may merit the same able assistance for the future.

The limit of this said future the Editor will now, with his friends' permission, place at certainly not more than two years—a period at which he will endeavour to have a volume in continuation ready for the farm-yard and the fireside. More or less frequent than this, he has been told by those best qualified to judge, would scarcely be advisable; and hence to a new volume of the Herd Book every other year would he wish to be understood as confining himself. There has, however, been so great a leeway to work up, that it has been found to be impossible to include the whole of the matter now in a single cover; consequently a second or companion volume, already in a very forward state, will shortly follow, and thus put the work into plain-sailing for the year 'forty-eight. For a brief season, therefore, the Editor most respectfully begs to make his bow, wishing his subscribers, one and all, that success which so useful and delightful an occupation deserves, and reminding them, in reference to his own humble efforts in the good cause, of the usual indulgence extended to a first attempt, and the proverbial popularity of "practice makes perfect."
